From the President

It’s been my highest professional honor and pleasure to lead and manage the American Institute for Economic Research. We have experienced a strong revival of our core mission to educate Americans on the value of personal freedom, free enterprise, property rights, limited government, and sound money.

I’m pleased to report that in 2018, the American Institute for Economic Research became the most active economic research and pro-market organization in the world. It’s a big claim but it is verifiable based on the reach and event metrics in the management report. On both fronts, we have achieved more than dozens of organizations many times our size.

This has occurred for several reasons. First, we have built a serious, professional, and dedicated staff. Second, our governance structures have taken strides toward focus and integrity. Third, we’ve worked to restore the vision of our founder E.C. Harwood to the center of AIER’s work.

2018 at a Glance

Ten books from AIER’s past are back in print. We’ve published three additional new works, and have six new books in the works. We are competing directly with the best publishers out there.

7,216 people have attended 198 AIER events around the country and world in 2018.

AIER has published 815 articles and 203 research reports, reaching 850,000 readers in 2018.

AIER’s social media reach is more than one million, while our mainstream media reach has exceeded a potential 301 million and has been valued by a professional firm at $76 million.

AIER has produced six editorial videos with total organic views of 267,900.

We invested in our IT systems to improve security and functionality.
Unrestricted donations to AIER are up 68% year over year and nearly 2.5 times what they were in 2016.

All our financials are sound, as confirmed by our finance department as verified by auditors.

An internal HR report reveals dramatic increases in job happiness of staff.

We’ve undertaken a major effort to invest in our facilities.

Public awareness of our work has never been higher.

In short, 2018 will be remembered as the year AIER re-claimed its voice and mission. We have done this through vast new media exposure, a stepped-up publishing program, a refocusing of existing research projects, a dramatic expansion of our editorial mission, and the acquisition of high-performance projects for local organizing and sound-money research. In addition to my appearances on CNBC, Bloomberg, BBC, and Fox Business, I gave talks around the world. We are reaching far more people than we have in our 85-year history, so there is something in our work for everyone interested in the unity of principle and science in the service of prosperity and freedom.

AIER was founded in 1933 in response, in large part, to egregious trends in money and banking at the time. Harwood noted that neither the governmental agencies nor the universities could be trusted to be principled defenders of the foundations of civilization. He wanted a truly independent institution. It is still needed now, perhaps more than ever.

I became an economist in hopes not only of doing good scholarship but also changing the world. AIER is the ideal venue for doing so because of our firm commitment to the rights of private property and the security and productivity of private wealth.

Edward Stringham

Edward Altar Stringham

President, AIER
From the Editorial Director

It is within the power of ideas to change the world by changing minds. We’ve never had better technology available to realize this mission. AIER had been behind in the deployment of digital media to support editorial initiatives. We have begun to change this with a renewed focus on digital development, social media outreach, content sharing arrangements with other publishers, and daily commentary on current events in economics, finance, and culture.

The editorial space within digital media is dominated by the advocacy of greater government control over society and the economic life of the nation. AIER counters this with compelling, credible, and timely material distributed through the website, social media, content sharing, and translations.

In addition, AIER has renewed its traditional publishing mission with new monographs and books, using contemporary distribution models made possible by print-on-demand technology. The emphasis is on new and legacy material. For example, E.C. Harwood’s major books are now in print and available to anyone in both digital and physical versions. The same is true for perhaps several dozen publications of AIER over the decades. This legacy work must be given new life.

It’s truly awesome to consider the credibility that AIER has earned over 85 years of history. This is a huge asset that must be guarded with utmost scrupulosity. At the same time, the asset should be deployed to realize the mission under the guidance of my friend and colleague Edward Stringham.

In 2018, we’ve seen a dramatic increase in AIER brand recognition. In the past, only 13 percent of our website users were returning. Now we are up to 25 percent. The ideal is 50 percent new and 50 percent returning. We are getting there by providing a daily stream of credible, high-end content that is attracting a broad audience of informed and influential readers, who in turn share that with their friends and co-workers. The network is growing bit by bit.

Today, AIER features the best research and writing by many of the best thinkers in our realm.

Sound Money

E.C. Harwood was inspired to found the American Institute for Economic Research in 1933 in large part by monetary policy in the 1920s and three catastrophic monetary reforms forced by Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Thinking it was a way to end the Great Depression, FDR closed the banks (locking out depositors), confiscated all gold in private hands, and then devalued the currency. American wealth had been attacked at its very core.

At the very origin, then, sound money was central to the vision and mission of AIER. Left to their own devices, political actors have followed Keynes down the path of devaluation and discretion in monetary policy. Many in the economics profession have aided and abetted these efforts by inventing ever new justifications for central banking, bank regulation, and centralized management of money.

The great economists in the profession who are the free-market dissidents desperately need support. They need a venue. They need colleagues. They need an audience. They need students. This is precisely why AIER acquired the Sound Money Project. The Sound Money Project conducts research and promotes awareness about monetary stability and financial privacy. Now a part of AIER, the project is comprised of leading academics and practitioners in money, banking, and macroeconomics. It offers regular commentary and in-depth analysis on monetary policy, alternative monetary systems, financial markets regulation, cryptocurrencies, and the history of monetary and macroeconomic thought.
Our program re-establishes AIER in the center of the discussion about sound money. It provides an outlet for us to promote our contest, awards, and research. The advisory board is made up of three of the most important innovators in the field. The project puts out popular articles every few days that reach a wide audience. AIER’s Sound Money Project now has a working paper series directed toward professors and graduate students.

Since being acquired by our great institute, AIER’s Sound Money Project has published more than 100 posts on monetary topics. Most importantly for AIER, this project puts our voice back at the center of the debate over monetary policy. When FDR, and so many presidents after him, engaged in their machinations, they didn’t meet with enough opposition. E.C. Harwood and a few others were lone voices. AIER’s Sound Money Project wants to make sure that is never the case again, that sound money will always have respected and credible voices in defense of good policy.

The prosperity of a nation depends heavily on sound money. Sometimes this is difficult for people to understand but it is crucial. There is no faster road to poverty and social chaos than the destruction of money. At the same time, sound money can be a means of protecting wealth and freedom itself. Technology today has enabled us to have another chance to bring market forces to bear on this topic. But that can’t happen unless the good ideas replace the bad ones. This is the purpose and grand vision of AIER’s Sound Money Project.
Programs

Many people have approached us recently with their personal story of visiting our campus to do research or to attend a conference. These special conversations remind us that personal connections and experiences are often the most valuable and most memorable part of one’s educational journey. With this in mind, AIER continues to shape its program portfolio to reach as many people as possible in a variety of ways.

From a programming perspective, 2018 was a year of continued growth and renewal. Our task was to remember the reasons why E.C. Harwood founded AIER in 1933, but reshape his institute as a modern, dynamic, agile, and outward-facing non-profit. We are happy to say AIER now has a full menu of programs to complement our outstanding research and editorial efforts.

Strategically, our programs now leverage our research to create opportunities where regular people—from business people to college students—can meet, exchange ideas, and build relationships. Through on-campus seminars, local meetings, and regional conferences, our approach is to build a systematic programming portfolio.

AIER’s programs now reach every demographic. From school teachers attending our Teach the Teachers events, to graduate students, scholars, and business people attending our conferences and Bastiat Society program events.

In short, there is now an AIER program for everyone in more places than ever before.

Tremendous Progress

AIER began the year 2018 with new commitments to old ideas. We sought to revive the connection to E.C. Harwood’s framework of thought and research as the driving force of AIER’s work. We sought to produce research and education to help people understand evolving political-economic events and be prepared to act in their self-interest. We wanted to re-engage and grow AIER’s network of scholars, students, writers, supporters, and donors. And we looked to improve the organizational health in operations and finances, engage experienced and high-level expertise in staffing, and get on sound footing throughout the institution in a way that becomes obvious to benefactors.

AIER’s daily articles are now listed on Google News and Seeking Alpha, one of the most popular financial news websites. Our reprints are way up since adopting a Creative Commons Policy for copyright. Reprints and translations are a daily occurrence.

The Institute is more tightly focusing on the goals in its mission statement and both internal and external management. Doing so in a more effective way to maximize the impact of each dollar spent. Improved efficiency will increase the impact of AIER on the everyday American and on society.

Teach The Teachers Teaching Free Enterprise Initiative

In 2018, our Teach the Teachers Initiative is ramped up to be a full AIER program. We held three programs of this sort in 2018. The general setup of the program including the target audience of high school teachers and delivery method (in person seminar coupled with online lesson plans and follow ups) is very similar. Students are exposed to alternative views such as the possibility that the Federal Reserve causes the business cycle.
Spring and Summer Fellowship Program for Graduate Students

Historically, AIER offered programs for graduate students to learn Harwood-style economics, which they would not learn in their home university. We believe this is one of our core programs and we plan to do much more of this. In April and July of 2018 we held one-week conferences on sound money, free banking, and private governance. The program had 22 attendees, half professors and half graduate students or recently minted PhDs who had yet to start their academic career. We revived our Visiting Research Fellowship program for aspiring young economists. Visiting us over a period of a few months each were three international graduate students. As our delivery capacity expands, we plan to expand this program.

Research

An ideal research institute has material accessible to the everyday man, and behind it has very strong research.

AIER is now focused on topics that historically were of interest to the Institute and using those as a springboard for modern economic discussions. In addition to engaging more scholars from around the country and world, our in-house staff members continue to produce materials such as Business Conditions Monthly. We are also having our in-house staff members focus more on E.C. Harwood’s historical documents (including by doing archival work) and highlight how they are relevant today.

Planned Giving Through AIER

Since 1969, donors to AIER’s programs have enjoyed the advantages of having a portion of their estate managed by AIER - knowing AIER will provide income for life to their designated individuals. Most organizations are not willing to commit themselves to a program that may not benefit them for 75 years or more; for us this is simply a part of our long-term commitment to helping individuals protect their financial future while supporting AIER.

AIER currently manages $151 million in split-interest trusts (Charitable Remainder Unitrusts and Pooled Income Funds).

AIER’s tax-deductible planned giving program offers a lifetime income plan for up to three generations.

Imagine having a guaranteed income for you, your children and grandchildren, and supporting the work of AIER in the process.

It is important that you consult with your legal and financial advisors before committing to such a deferred gift. We will be happy to run simulations on our planned giving programs to help you with your decision, but we may not provide specific legal or financial advice.
AIER was founded in 1933 to be an independent research and publishing institution to oppose the terrible trends of the time and prepare the ground for a bright future. That mission is more necessary today that ever. AIER has a unique role to play in being the credible and high-end voice for freedom, wealth protection, individual rights, and market forces, as opposed to government and central-bank manipulation of our lives. AIER today stands ready to lead this great intellectual movement, both in being a model of internal and external excellence.

Our website rankings, media appearances, and public appearances have skyrocketed, and continued through all of 2018. Donations are up significantly. To get where we need to go requires vision, adaptability, and encouragement from our supporters. AIER can be the world’s most important voice for the message it was founded to advance, and thereby make the world a more beautiful place.
